

COPD - coping
with breathlessness,
panic and anxiety

HEALTHY MINDS

Got something on your mind?

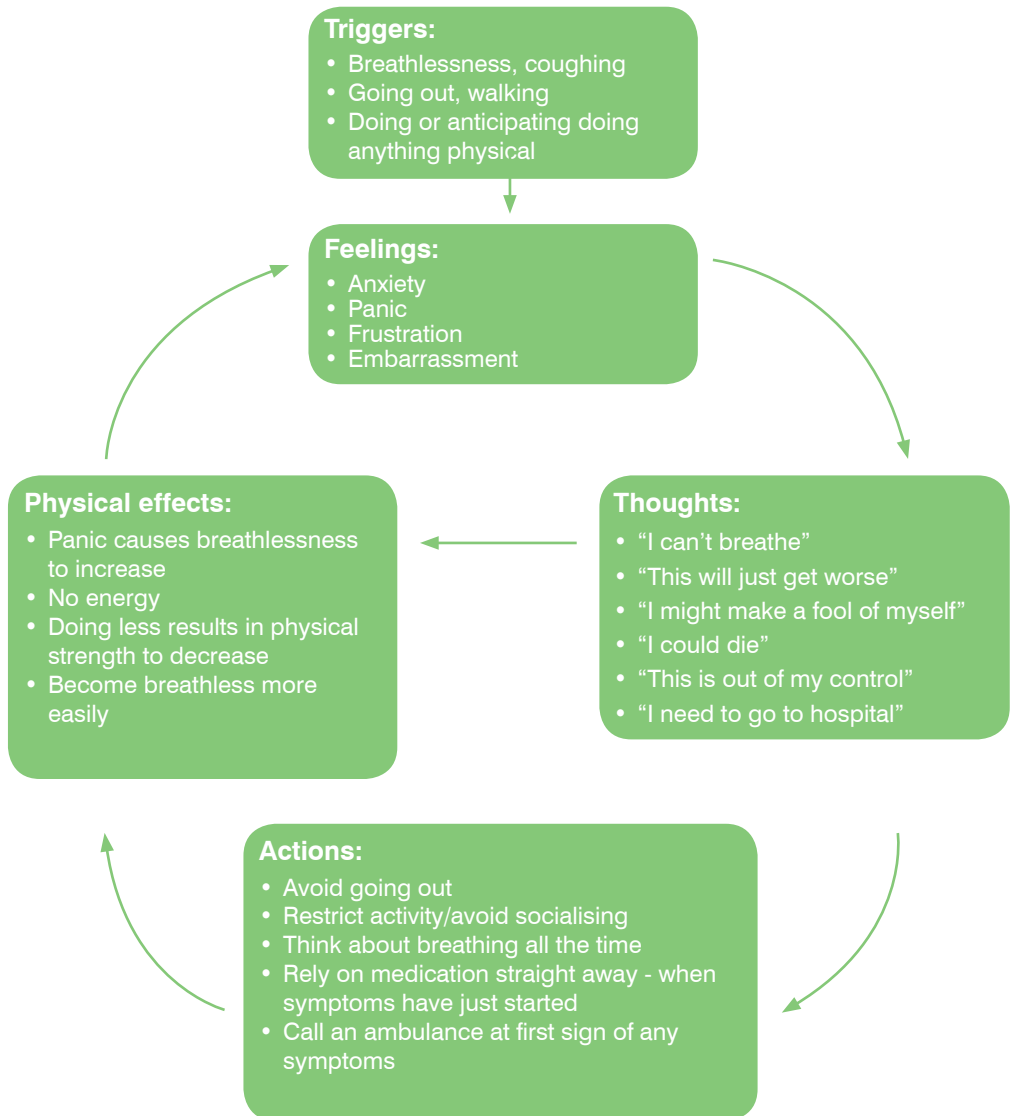

Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD)

Chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) can have a huge impact on your life. You may find that you are struggling to manage day-to-day tasks, feeling worried about the future or panicky and anxious about becoming breathless. Some of these feelings will come and go. Others may be harder to shake off.

It's normal to feel panicky when you become breathless. Feeling panicky can however make you feel even more short of breath. Panic increases the breathlessness and this can turn into a vicious cycle. You may find that you are fearful of continuing with day-to-day tasks, in case this increases your breathlessness.

A common reaction is to withdraw and stop doing things, such as leaving the house or spending time with friends or family. Withdrawing in this way can lead to further problems with your physical and emotional health. The cycle opposite shows how this may happen.

How Healthy Minds can help

Following the advice of your GP or nurse is essential to managing your condition effectively.

You can also receive help to manage situations which make you feel panicky, as well as any stress, anxiety or other emotions. In turn this can have a positive impact on your health condition.

Healthy Minds will:

- Offer a safe place to allow you to talk about your condition and how it affects you.
- Help you to better understand the interaction between breathlessness and panic.
- Allow you to learn ways of coping with and managing panic.
- Allow you to set realistic goals and to pace your daily activities to make them more manageable.
- Allow you to find ways of coping and dealing with stress.

Our therapists can provide you with support in a number of ways. You will be offered an assessment to decide on the most appropriate treatment option. This may include one-to-one therapy, telephone sessions or group therapy. They could work with you on a one-to-one basis, or you may want to be accompanied by a close friend or family member if you would find it helpful. Some sessions may also be delivered in a group setting. This offers you the opportunity to share your thoughts and concerns with people who may be experiencing similar issue and learn new ways of coping.
